There is no account in the papers of any facts connected with the robbery of treasure a fortnight ago.

that is not at all wonderful, for it may be to cross the border by night, and were even ordered all the time to keep their mouths shut as they went along with the matter if even once alight. The loss of the £13,000 abstracted from the Egyptian Government, which was made good the amount for which their release was required, was paid by the Royal Bank Company's agent here. Every one connected with that particular train from which the escape was taken, in any way, direct or indirect, was arrested, among them being the station master, the guard, the porter, the station inspector, the railway police, the platform men on duty as well as the crew of the Khedive's orders, in Cairo, undergoing a most searching examination, and were treated the guilty for punishment. It is hardly necessary to say that no persons escaped, save natives rarely do. There was a great crowd assembled lately outside the barracks to see two native women shot for the crime of having been caught carrying opium. They were assembled, but not strafed, and it is reported that the military authorities represented the view that the employment of soldiers as executioners in such matters was undesirable, and that the practice of sending convicted criminals did not escape, however.

The witness—That is true. I am a Polish soldier. I desire that the uniform may not be soiled or torn.

Witness—There was also a canon in the room. It was loaded with powder only.

The canon was produced by the court, and was examined and found to be in good order. It was mounted on wheels, and was about the size of an ordinary blunderbuss.

Defendant—It is a model of my invention, and I have no right to take it to submit to the authorities. It is obvious that England had arms, and yet this superior invention has been rejected as "unapplicable to the service."

Witness—The only other witnesses were Oberst Dohl and Diersch, and he got adopted.

Witness continued—The defendant stepped out of the room, and went into the street, and before going into the middle of the street, raised a loud report, and caused a crowd to assemble. On his return from the house he requested the "cab," and had it driven away.

Witness—You think it true, that I went to the Metropolitan Police to make a call on the officers of Prussia.

Witness—Yes.

Henry Davis, the tatter of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, deposed that the defendant called on him at his residence, and that he was asked for the Prince, who was not at home, was glad to get him outside of the house.
